

From: [REDACTED]
To: Consultation
Subject: Submission - RIS and Proposed Regulations
Date: Tuesday, 8 September 2020 10:22:21 PM

---

Hello,

Professional development would be a great thing in the age of constant change, however I wonder who is qualified to deliver the development. I have been a TAFE electrical tutor and I have to say the general tutor skills level leaves something to be desired. I taught the 3rd year students and there were only 4 of us with the skills to do that and only one other who could teach G109 particularly. Most tutors have not worked in the industry for years or only do basic installation on a part time basis. On the other side I still run my own Controls company and have to keep up with several standards and the latest equipment to assist my clients who are mostly electricians who do not have the skill level I do. Yes this sounds big headed but what sort of professional development would give me any more than just another piece of paper but no real skills.

At some point you have to decide what will be delivered, to whom by whom and to what real benefit not just a useless political exercise and waste of resources.

[REDACTED]

I am happy to provide my details privately if you ask but due to all the scams out there not publicly.

Sent from my Samsung Galaxy smartphone.